F1 2017: Porto double for Alonso F1 2017: Porto double for AlonsoSergio Perez's shoulder injury adds more clarity to Fernando Alonso's status, writes Edd Straw... Sergio Perez's shoulder injury means that Fernando Alonso's position in the drivers' championship is now clear. Having been on an eight-race winless run since his first win in Australia, the Spaniard's main rival for the championship title has suddenly become more of a friend. Although all eyes were on their Ferrari team-mate Sebastian Vettel following his Hungary win, the focus quickly shifted to McLaren's problems when Perez came to a halt in the pit lane. McLaren have described the accident as "slight" and initially it appeared that the Mexican driver had suffered a broken arm, with the team initially announcing that he was out for up to three months. It has now emerged that Perez will take a two-month break from the sport, ruling him out of the final two rounds in Monaco and China. The newly-unveiled 'grid penalties' system came to the fore in the second half of 2015, with the stewards ordering seven drivers to start the Canadian Grand Prix on the back-of-grid following a revised interpretation of the rules. Alonso's run of bad luck was interrupted for the first time since May last month when, on the same weekend as his team-mate's accident, he dropped to fifth place in the standings after some bad luck at Monaco. During the 2015 Monaco Grand Prix Carlos Sainz had a collision with the back of his Renault team-mate Nico Hulkenberg as they returned to the pit lane. The stewards deemed that Hulkenberg did not cut the Renault off in time and handed him

Q: What's the best way to handle user data in webapps? My experience with user data is that it's usually used in the application itself and is not stored on a server. This is because I don't want to store too much data on the server, and I prefer to keep a low coupling between the server and the clients. But I'm still looking for a good way to keep users' data on the server. I really don't need it to be too large, so it would be best if it was not too much data, but at the same time, I don't want to create a database on each user. So what's the best way to keep user data in a webapp? A: A "webapp" is nothing but a (the) browser (client), so what I suggest is that you put the user specific data into an http session. You could also save it into a cookie if you want (but cookies are not necessarily used for storing user data anyway). It is considered a bad practice though. See this SO question: What are the rules for session and authentication cookies in ASP.NET and how should they be used?. If you need more storage (such as something persistent) you could use a database or some other kind of backend that you run separately from the client, and let it communicate with the client to store and access the data. If all you need is a cache, you could use Memcache, or any of the many javascript-based caches such as memcached. If you really want to keep it "on the client" (as you put it), you could use something like IndexedDB. It requires a bit more effort though.

Collaboration Funding and support for collaborative and consortial activities is rapidly increasing, particularly for targeted projects to help stem the loss of species and the fragmentation of ecosystems. We have identified funding that exists for consortia, working in three key areas: Peer reviewed funding (or funds from 'best practice' sources) Peer reviewed non-funding Tertiary sector (government and non-government) funding We plan to make more effort to continue to collect funding information. If you are aware of any funding sources for collaborative and consortial activities please email us at estt4@cornwall.gov.uk for a copy of the funding source, brief description of the work and the names of the other partners. Identify funding sources The Sustainable Seas and Ecosystems Advice Centre help desk (info@coastguard.gov.uk) and the Chief Scientist's Office can also provide advice about grants and funding sources. Product Description It's three big, destructive, already-owned arms in one great, low price, and will give you a huge advantage over the paper monsters. Marksmen are designed for a mid- to long-range role, firing at enemies from behind cover, blurring up to the last second before their shots to ensure a hit. There's nothing they can't do, and they can deal with groups or lone targets. But the ARES-SPIDER is designed to get in close, tearing into infantry, armored vehicles, or even aircraft. The ARES is the primary weapon with three guns mounted to a launch frame. A heavy machinegun like the M240 rounds out its firepower. But only a Marksman knows that two of the ARES' three guns are powerful snipers with 270-degree arcs and 0.5-second lock times. The high-powered loadouts are a great choice for the Marksman's close-combat role, with two missiles for a devastating attack, and a second missile on an RPG launcher, capable of piercing almost any surface. You can also mount a smoke grenade to confuse targets. A redstone-powered on-board system recycles

Before buying this expansion, you must first buy the base game. Stratics Veteran Synergy will give you the most bang for your buck by far. It will give you everything you need to keep the game running smoothly. Synergy makes a lot of money by selling "experience boosters" (not sure if that's what they are called). They're basically a bunch of upgrades and skills that will make everything run smoother and give you a little extra firepower. These boost the gold and experience gained by 20-50%, not too sh
